Quick tap-tap-tap followed by sweet chirping awakened me from a profound sleep. I flew out of my warm bed, grabbed my camera and flung the door open open only to realise exactly what error I made. The explosion of cold winter air hit me so hard, mist welcomed me and I was bare-feet. But that afternoon, a brown-breasted woodpecker and a couple of Himalayan bulbul were selected over warmth. And the quiet I got! I eventually got to meet Quaint in 7 Pines at Kasauli. A little further away from the primary road, a winding road took me through chir-pines along with a lot of wild flowers and attracted me to the fairly boutique hotel with an English touch. The hotel 7 Pines is a perfect choice for a relaxed stay amidst nature, its Colonial ambience and the warmth of a home are definitely something to write home about. But dear readers, this is it. This is exactly what 7 Pines is about--a really relaxed stay. In summary: 7 Pines is peaceful, quiet and extremely laid-back. Here are just five (very compelling) reasons why you must think about this scenic retreat.

It is not only confined to the location. At 7 Pines, character is given the utmost significance. From the decor to everything you eat, you may observe the existence of nature in everything which 7 Pines is all about. From pretty flowery curtains to shutters, from the comfortable patio furniture to the garden-fresh salads, everything makes you feel good and sun-shiney! Every room opens to a garden view or the woods view (my personal favourite) or the Shimla view. Every where you look, you may see green and fairly wild flowers.

Also, the good people at 7 Pines adore their birds. Blue whistling thrush, Russet sparrow, grey tree pie, brown breasted woodpecker were just some of the many birds which paid me a visit. youtube
